

Born in the Soviet Union, raised in an independent Estonia and educated in the UK, Maria Kapajeva has found herself in an involuntary position of 'the other'. A position, she has embraced and employs as datum in her artistic practice, leads her to explore a diverse spectrum of cultural identity and gender issues within historical and contemporary contexts.

Focusing on women's position in contemporary society, Kapajeva aims to question how identities are formed via subconscious effects of advertising, movies and popular media. A perpetual state of continuous transition, such as from socialist to post socialist or from being young to middle aged, serves as constant inspiration. Being originally from a borderland region, border within postcolonial geopolitical conditions becomes to be the core in her work. She uses various mediums, such as video, photography, textile and installations, to bring to the focus what is often left invisible or stays in peripheral vision.
